Performance Commentary

Q2 2024 saw a difficult start in both Equity and Fixed Income markets, as higher-than-expected inflation persisted and the Federal Reserve Bank left rates steady, while central banks in Europe and Canada cut rates. This trend was reversed in June, with the US core inflation falling slightly (though still higher than 3%), and developed ex-Australia markets finished a relatively flat quarter returning 0.2% for the quarter. US stocks continued the rally from late 2022 with S&P 500 reaching a series of record highs, led by Information Technology stocks. Magnificent 7 Continued the strong outperformance while Energy and REIT's underperformed. Size and value premiums were negative for the quarter while profitability premium was generally positive within large-cap stocks. The Australian and NZ markets both lagged behind, while Emerging Markets outperformed, with IT and Energy sectors contributing. Global Fixed Income Markets had a negative return for the quarter, with positive credit premium as corporate bonds outperformed government bonds. Short term bonds outperformed long term, keeping the yield curve inverted.
