Performance Commentary

Q4 2024 presented mixed results across markets. Equity stocks, particularly in the US continued to rally, driven by two interest rate cuts and the US election results, rounding up a strong year. The mega-cap technology stocks dominated, and Growth stocks regained the lead, while value underperformed. Outside the US, Republicans winning the election had the opposite effect due to worries over trade tariffs in both developed and emerging markets. However, despite the negative Q4, overall return for the year was strong across all markets. Best performing sectors for the quarter were IT, communication services, consumer discretionary and financial services, while real estate and healthcare were worst performers. Size premium was negative for the quarter as large caps outperformed small caps, while profitability premium was positive. Fixed income markets experienced considerable volatility and posted negative returns for the quarter, driven by geopolitical tension and fluctuating inflation rates. The reserve bank indicated fewer rate cuts might follow due to persistent inflation concerns, and yield curves shifted up and stipend with long term bonds underperforming short term. Credit premium was negative as well. In line with overall market performance, ACI Conservative fund returned 0.76% (after fees, before tax) for the quarter finishing 2024 with 7.58% return for the year.
