PERFORMANCE COMMENTARY

The second quarter of 2026 was positive for investment markets, despite ongoing geopolitical uncertainty and persistent inflation concerns. Markets again demonstrated their forward-looking nature, with returns improving even while negative headlines remained prominent.

The ACI Conservative Fund delivered a positive return over the quarter, supported by its larger allocation to income and defensive assets. Global bonds benefited from easing interest rate expectations and improving investor sentiment, while property markets were supported by expectations that interest rates may continue to ease and by renewed demand for income-producing assets.

Overall, the Conservative Fund produced a stable and positive outcome, reinforcing its role as a lower-volatility option for investors seeking capital preservation and income. While short-term market leadership continued to vary across asset classes, the portfolio remains focused on maintaining broad diversification and supporting investors through a range of market conditions.
